

FIGHTING FOR LIGHT

The Travels of a Tin Pot Warrior

THIS IS A BOOK THAT WILL HAVE YOU LAUGHING IN THE ISLES

Fighting For Light, The Travels of a Tin Pot Warrior is a book about one of the thousands of people, given the chance, who upped and left backgrounds offering very little in the way of hope. They headed, like a herd of Wildebeest, for the promised-land, or the illusion of the promised-land, some making it and others not.

This book chronicles the life and epic travels of one such person, the author, from hazy and humble beginnings in the 1950's and 1960's, to an ill fated and short-lived period in the armed forces, followed by years of high adventure and restless travels around large parts of the globe, through invasions and revolutions, one after another. The book provides much amusement and fun and will strike a cord with the many people who also traveled the same route.

It will open the reader's eyes to a (seemingly) innocent and much easier time when it was possible to get up and go, stick out your thumb, Kerouac style, and travel here, there and everywhere.

The author: Roger Sproston has had an unusual and eventful life, travelling the world, dodging the bullets, and, latterly, creating and running a medium size publishing company in The UK. He spends his time trying to stay on the straight and not so narrow and generally hoping for the best.

Released: 1st October, 2014 / Extent: 144pp / ISBN: 978-1-847-16494-0 / Price: £8.99